MAJOR THOMAS YOUNG

(1764-1848)

REVOLUTIONARY SOLDIER

This article contains information on his background, life, parents, siblings and a listing of his family members.
However, genealogies have been developed on his descendants, the BRANDON and MC JUNKIN lineages and a large number of the inter-marriage lineages noted in this article. These genealogiês contain the same types of materials found in this article.

MAJOR THOMAS YOUNG, great-great-great-grandfather of this writer, seemed to embody the fervent patriotism, ardor and personal courage of the typical patriot of the Revolutionary War. He has been quoted by many historians as a most reliable source for many of the battles waged in South Carolina during the War. Yet, to the best of my knowledge, no reliable and documented account of his life and descendants has ever been published. Over the past fifteen years, I have accumulated many volumes of materials on his ancestry and descendants, intermarriages and neighbors. An attempt has been made to research all children of each generation of the Young Family, their intermarriages and friends. Each of these intermarriage lines are also researched. I am hopeful that someday in the distant future, I may publish in one place the pertinent data concerning these early pioneer families of South Carolina. This article deals only with the parentage and first descendants of Major Young.

Luckily, Major Young's autobiography was published in the Orion Monthly Magazine, in 1843 (1) and this, along with his pension application (2) furnish the major information concerning his early life and military activities. Other information has been obtained from Family Bibles, historical articles, cemetery information, census reports and family traditions.

Thomas Young, Jr. was born on the seventeenth of January, 1764, Laurens District, South Carolina. As a small infant, he was then carried by his father, Thomas B. Young, to Union District, South Carolina to the Brown's Creek area. He remained in this area for the rest of his life about four miles southeast of Union, South Carolina, in the near vicinity of what is now Monarch Mills, South Carolina.

The Young and Brandon families had evidently migrated from York County, Pennsylvania some years previously. These two families intermarried with many other first settlers of of this area of South Carolina, namely: Cunningham, Hughes, McBeth, Humphries, Calhoun, Steen, Gregory, McCrary, Kennedy, McCool, Harlan, Armstrong. Close friends and neighbors of these families were: McJunkin, Jolly, McWhorter, Savage, and Sharp.

These families lived in tents until cabins could be erected. They were instrumental in building the first roads and settlements and in forming and assisting in the duties of the first Court system. Colonel Thomas Brandon donated the lands for the first jail and courthouse. The present courthouse at Union, South Carolina still stands on this site. Much of this information is recorded in the Minutes of the first Courts of Union, South Carolina. (3)

Nothing is known concerning Thomas Young's boyhood, except that he must have undergone the same hardships and deprivations of the other pioneer youths. He obviously developed much personal stamina and absorbed the political desires of the times, as evidenced by his reports in his writings.

At the age of sixteen, Major Young volunteered (as a Private) for service under his uncle-Colonel Thomas Brandon, who was in command of the Second Spartan Regiment, Carolina Army. To quote in his own words from his autobiography: "In the spring of 1780, I think in April, Col. Brandon was encamped with a party of 70 or 80 Whigs, about five miles below Union courthouse, where Christopher Young now lives. (Note-MPM: This was the site of the Young family homestead and Christopher was a brother of Major Young.) Their object was to collect forces for the approaching campaign and to keep a check upon the Tories. They had taken prisoner, one Adam Steedham, as vile a Tory as ever lived. By some means, Steedham escaped during the night and notified the Tories of Brandon's position. The Whigs were then attacked by a large body of the enemy before day and completely routed. On that occassion, my brother, John Young, was murdered. I shall never forget my feelings when told of his death. I do not believe I had ever used an oath before that day, but then I tore open my bosom, and swore that I would never rest till I had avenged his death. Subsequently, a hundred Tories felt the weight of my arm for the deed, and around Steedham's neck I fastened the rope for a reward for his cruelties. On the next day, I left home in my shirtsleeves and joined Brandon's party. Christopher Brandon and I joined at the same time, and the first engagement we were in was at the Stallion's in York District." (S.C.) (1)

Major Young served in many battles including King's Mountain and Cowpens. As previously stated, several historians have utilized his accounts as authority for incidents of these battles. (4)(5)(6)

He was severely wounded in an encounter following the battle of Cowpens. This incident demonstrates the extreme physical stamina, fervor, courage and determination of a mere youth of sixteen or seventeen in the course of his wartime experiences. Again, to quote from his autobiography: "After this, (Battle of Cowpens) Major Jolly and seven or eight of us, resolved upon an excursion to capture some of the baggage. We went about twelve miles and captured two British soldiers, two negroes and two horses laden with portmanteaus. One of the portmanteaus belonged to a paymaster in the British service and contained gold. Jolly insisted upon my returning with the prize to camp, while he pursued a little farther. I did so. Jolly's party dashed onward and soon captured an armorer's wagon, with which they became so engaged that they forgot all about me. I rode along for some miles at my leizure on my fine gray charger, talking to my prisoners; when, all at once I saw coming in advance, a party, which I soon discovered to be British. I knew it was no time to consider now; so I wheeled, put spurs to my horse, and made down the road in hopes of meeting Jolly and his party. My horse was stiff, however, from the severe exercise I had given him that morning, and I soon found that they were gaining upon me. It was now a plain case, and I could no longer hope to engage one at a time. My pistol was empty, so I drew my sword and made battle. (See Xerox of photograph of this sword) I knew it was death, anyhow, and I resolved to sell my life as dearly as possible. In a few minutes, one finger on my left hand was split open, then I received a cut upon my sword arm by a parry which disabled it. In the next instant, a cut from a sabre across my forehead (the scar of which I will carry to my grave). (MPM-see Rev. James Sayes later remarks about these scars) The skin slipped down over my eyes and the blood blinded me so that I could see nothing. Then came a thrust in the right shoulder blade, then a cut upon the left shoulder, and a last cut (which you can feel for yourself) on the back of my head---- and I fell upon my horses neck. They took me down, bound up my wounds, and placed me again on my horse as a prisoner of war." (1)

Major Young was then summoned by Colonel Tarleton. He rode along with him for questioning on the way to Cornwallis' camp. They encamped at Hamilton's Ford on Broad River. Major Young and another soldier, Deshasher, escaped that night. They were unable to swim the river due to flooding conditions. He went to Captain Grant's home, had his wounds dressed and the next day went to his own home. He was confined there for about a week with fever and sickness. In order to escape detection from the roving Tories, he then slept in the woods for about three weeks, waiting until he could regain strength and rejoin a group of Whigs. He later rejoined a detachment of Whigs under Colonel Brandon and joined the seige of Ft. Motte.

See section on Major Young's military service for further details of his military activities. (2)

After the War, Major Young lived about four or five miles southeast of Union. This homestead is marked on one of the maps of Mills Atlas. He married after the war and raised a large family. (See Family sheets later) He applied for a pension in 1838, S. 10309. (2)

Rev. James Saye later stated: "Persons in the habit of attending at Union upon public days within the last twenty years have hardly failed to notice an old gentleman moving about in the crowd. He was of rather a thick make, broad shoulders and brawny arms. Among his grey locks several deep scars may be traced across his head. If his right arm were made bare, similar evidences of violent battles would be manifest. This gentleman was familiarly known as Major Tom Young." (7)

Major Young died 7 November 1848 and is buried in an unmarked grave at Old Union Cemetery, near Monarch Mills, South Carolina. (8) He is buried near Colonel Thomas Brandon, William Kennedy and others of his family connections. His grave is marked only with military marker placed by the Daughters of the American Revolution. A chapter of men in Union honored him and honored themselves by the name of THOMAS YOUNG CHAPTER, SONS OF THE REVOLUTION.

Major Thomas Young had two children by his first wife: Lettie or Lettice Hughes and nine children by his second wife: Sarah Cunningham. Several died young, and several migrated to Arkansas, Texas and Mississippi. His son: Dr. Thomas Young, migrated to Claiborne County, Mississippi. This was my great-great-grandfather. He married there and established the plantation of Elmwood, which is still standing and in use today.

Family bibles, letters and other records of the family give information concerning Major Young's marriages and children. (~~10~~ 9) Much material has been gathered on the descent of several of these children. The lineage of Dr. Thomas Young has been developed up until the present date.

Major Young's patriotic and civic duties have been perpetuated through many of his descendants. The family of Dr. Thomas Young was embroiled in the Civil War encounters of the area of Port Gibson and Vicksburg, Mississippi. Many of the Young descendants have engaged in each War since Revolutionary times and have been active in civic and community affairs. The old and trite expression--"Blood Will Tell" seems to be borne out by the heritage left by Major Thomas Young, Revolutionary Patriot.

Thus, this not-so-gentle patriot essentially lived and died in the same area of Union County, South Carolina. He was willing to endure any hardships in the pursuit of fulfilling his concept of duty and patriotism in the quest for freedom. His descendants may be extremely proud of their ancestor and, it is hoped, continue to be imbued with the same pride and willingness to leave this country a bit better place for succeeding generations yet to come.

MIGRATION OF THE "YOUNG" FAMILY TO SOUTH CAROLINA and "UNION CHURCH" INFORMATION.

Rev. J. D. Bailey: Some Heroes of the American Revolution, Band & White, Printers, Spartanburg, S. C., 1924

p. 217 from "Life of Major Joseph McJunkin".

Rev. James Saye writes:: "A short time before these events (Defeat of Braddock, 1755), James Glen, the English Governor of South Carolina, had by treaty purchased from the Indians a large section of territory in the upper part of the Province, the soil of which was fertile and the climate salubrious...The rich valleys of the Catawba, Broad, Saluda, and Savannah rivers, with their numerous tributaries, offered all the husbandmen could ask. Under these circumstances, a large number of the exiles in Pennsylvania and Virginia,with their friends, sought homes in the sunny plains of the South. Among the emigrants who came to South Carolina was Samuel McJunkin (Father of Major Joseph McJunkin). He stopped on Tinker Creek, in what is now Union County, December 24, 1755. A number of his friends and relatives settled in the same section about the same time. Among these were the Brandons, Bogans, Youngs, Steens, Jollys, Kennedy and others. These were all Scotch-Irish."

(MPM-Major Thomas Young in his Autobiography stated that he was born in Laurens Co., S.C. in 1764. His brother: William Young, stated in his pension application that the Young family had come from York County, Pennsylvania. The Brandon family had migrated to South Carolina from Pennsylvania at the same time as the Young family.(10)

p. 214-215 "The Life of Colonel Joseph Hughes" re UNION CHURCH.

(MPM- Major Thomas Young married first: Lettice Hughes, possibly a sister or niece of Col. Hughes.)

"The church of which Hughes first became a member having played such a prominent part in the early history of Union District, it deserves special notice. Among the first settlers in that section were the Brandons, Bogans, Jollys, Kennedys, and McJunkins. A LITTLE LATER came the Cunninghams, Hughes, Savages, YOUNGS, Vances and Wilsons.

(MPM- Major Thomas Young's second wife was a Sarah CUNNINGHAM)--presently untraced).

The country being an uninhabited wild, these adventurers lived in tents until they could build cabins. Several of these were truly pious and frequently met on the Lord's Day for religious services. That they might have better facilities, they selected a site near the center of their settlements and erected a house of worship. It was on Big Brown's Creek, but being built for the use of both Presbyterians and Episcopalians, it was called "THE UNION CHURCH". The worshipers and attendants there being almost, if not entirely, uncompromising Whigs, two houses were then burnt during the Revolution by Tories, we presume.

The hallowed recollections and sacred memories that clustered around "The Union Church" must have been deeply engraved on the hearts of these fearless defenders of the Faith and of their country; for when the rights of self-government were obtained and when court districts were adopted and laid off by the State, the one in which "Union Church" was situated was named for it. Hence, Union, and Union County.

Sometime after the war the Presbyterians alone erected a house of worship about two miles east of Union, near the present Monarch Cotton Mills, and the original name, Brown's Creek, was retained. It was of this church that Colonel Joseph Hughes became a member and elder. Samuel McJunkin, Joseph McJunkin, William Kennedy, Thomas Kennedy, Christopher Brandon and John Savage, all Revolutionary Patriots of the first water, also served this church as Elders."

(MPM-This was probably the church of Major Thomas Young, also. He is buried in the "Old Union Cemetery", near Monarch Mills. Also buried in this Cemetery are Col. Thomas Brandon, Christopher Brandon, Squire William Kennedy and others. (8) (See Appendix F).

Union County, S.C. Heritage Committee: Union County, South Carolina Heritage Book, Mannie Lee Mabry, Editor, 1981.

"One of the first settlements in what is now Union County was on Brown's Creek about 1750-1755.

On April 3, 1752, Gabriel Brown received a land grant from the Province of North Carolina, Anson County, for "200 acres" on the south side of Broad River at the mouth of a long creek known as "Rangers Lodge"....this is the family for whom Brown's Creek was named.

Since Gabriel Brown received his North Carolina grant in 1752, he probably was living at the mouth of Brown's Creek by 1750 or 1751. He was one of the earliest settlers in what later became Union County.

Other settlers moved into the Brown's Creek area, and by about 1755, there were enough people living in the "Brown's Creek Settlement" to organize a church, the old Union Church, used jointly by the Presbyterians, Church of England (Episcopalians), and a few Quakers, as a place of worship. It was from this church that Union County received its name.

PARENTS OF MAJOR THOMAS YOUNG

FATHER: THOMAS B. YOUNG, Gentleman D: 1777/91

Thomas Young was probably born in Ireland, came to America as a young man, and settled in York County, Pennsylvania. His son, by his first wife, WILLIAM YOUNG, states in his pension application (10), 1833, that he was born in York County, Pa., 15 Oct 1744 and was living in old Ninety-Six district when called into service in Revolutionary War.

Thomas Young married first, a Miss Gray or Kilgore, probably in Pennsylvania. No furthur information is available concerning this marriage. They had two children: William and Mary Young.

Thomas Young remarried Catherine Brandon, sister of Colonel Thomas Brandon, either in York Co., Pa. or South Carolina. Their first child: George Young, Sr. was born 1755.

Thomas Young names only his wife: CATHERINE and sons William and Christopher Young in his will. Major Thomas Young is not named; however, he is named in his mother's will.

Thomas Young's will is recorded in Will Book "A", Union Co., S.C. However, it failed to be copied into this Will Book and is kept in the safe of the Probate Judge's office. Since it is the earliest will in Union County, it is marked "Of Especial Historical Interest". This will was personally zeroxed in June 1980 by this writer due to the courtesy of the Probate Judge of Union County, S.C. Will is dated: 19 May 1777 and was proved 4 April 1791.

WILL OF CATHERINE YOUNG (Corrected for easier reading)

In the Name of God, Amen. Whereas, I, CATHERINE YOUNG, widow-woman of Union District, South Carolina, being in a Low State of health and calling to mind the mortality of my Body, Although of a sound mind and memory and being desirous to settle my worldly affairs do make and constitute this my last Will and Testament, in the following manner: to wit, I do recommend my Soul to God that gave it and my Body to the ground to be buried in a christian manner at the descretion of my Executors in hope that God will at the Last Day raise it up to have a part in the first Resurrection through the merits of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Item- First, I do will to my beloved daughter: ELESEBETH YOUNG, all that I have given her aforetime and I do think that the same is her full part and divide of my estate.

Item- I do will or give to my beloved son: GEORGE YOUNG, all that he has already received of me as his full part or divide of my estate.

Item-3- I do will or give to my beloved daughter: MARY ANN GREGORY all that she has already of me as her full part or divide of my said estate.

Item 4th- I do will or give to my beloved daughter: LETES GREGORY or her heirs all that I have or did give unto her aforetime as her full part or divide of my said estate.

Item 5th- I do will or give unto my beloved son: THOMAS YOUNG, all that he hath received of me aforetime as his full part or divide of my said estate.

Item 6th- I do will or give unto my beloved daughter: JANE STEEN, all that she has already received of me as her full part and divide of my said estate.

Item 7th- I do will or give unto my beloved daughter: ELENOR CUNNINGHAM all that she has already had of me as her full part or divide of my said estate.

Item 8- I do will or give unto my beloved son CHRISTOPHER YOUNG, one Negro boy named Dave and also one bay mare named Doll, also one bay mare named Snip.

Item 9- I do will or give unto my beloved daughter RACHEL YOUNG, one horse named Pomp and saddle and bridle and two beds and their furniture as now in her name and two cows & cattle.

Item 10th- I do will or give unto my beloved daughter RUTH YOUNG, one horse, saddle, and bridle, and also two beds and their furniture as now in her name and also two cows.....also I desire that all the household furniture that belongs to me not yet willed should be equally divided between my daughters: RACHEL & RUTH--

I also will and desire that the child that my wench: Dinah is now great with, if it live, be Rachel's and if said wench should have another child that it be Ruth, but if she should be successful to have the said child mentioned to Ruth, then in that case the wench Dinah to be Christopher's. It is my desire that if either of the children named or alloted to either Rachel or Ruth should fale that in that case the wench-Dinah be equally divided between Christopher and the girls or gerl sonamed as above--

I do hereby constitute and ordain this to be my Last Will and Testament, disannulling and laying aside all other will or wills that I may have made hereby and I do hereby constitute my well beloved son: CHRISTOPHER YOUNG, to be my Executor of this my Last Will and Testament, as witness my hand and my seal this thirty first day of August in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirteen.

" COL. THOS. BRANDON--GEORGE BRANDON, the father of Col. Thos. Brandon, lived on Tinker Creek, a strict Presbyterian. Col. T. Brandon lived in the time of the War two miles from Union C.H., near where ELLIS now lives. JOHN BRANDON lived near W. (William) KENNEDY, on land now owned by his grandson, BENJAMIN BRANDON.

He was there prior to 1764. THOS. YOUNG, son-in-law of GEORGE BRANDON, settled near his brother-in-law: Col. Thos. Brandon, about 1764. He had previously resided in Laurens District, and his son, JOHN, was killed at Brandon's Defeat, and THOS. (Maj. Thomas Young) turned soldier forthwith."

(MPM-Note: See Major Young's pension application and "Memoirs" which prove the above information is all correct. However, does not mention name of his grandfather.)

George Brandon probably died in York or Lancaster County, Pa. However, no definite proof of his immigration date or place of death has been proved.

MEMOIR OF MAJOR THOMAS YOUNG,

A REVOLUTIONARY PATRIOT OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

"Tet by your patience
I will a round unvarnished tale deliver."

The Revolutionary history of the Southern Colonies is yet to be written. Rich and varied as may have been the materials for the work, it is, nevertheless, a lamentable truth, that very little has been preserved of the early struggles of the Revolutionists.

One by one have the glorious old heroes of '76 gone "to that bourne from which no traveller returns," leaving behind them no precious record of the past. Many a deed of noble daring, many a heroic example worthy of the palmiest days of Greece and Rome, has been buried with them in the tomb.

The historian, to be true to the age of which he writes, should not be content to give merely accounts of battles and the movements of kings and princes. He should endeavor to give us an idea of the manners and habits of the people, the character and spirit of the age. He should strive to "hold as 't were the mirror up to Nature, to show virtue her own features, scorn her own image, and the very age and body of the time, its form and pressure." To do this, in writing of the past, he must needs rely greatly on traditionary records. Every ballad, every pasquinade, every anecdote, should be treasured up as fruitful material. How imperfect, indeed, would be our conceptions of the sanguinary partisan wars of the Revolution, which ravaged the southern colonies, bursting asunder the bands of society, dividing kindred and friends, and arraying brother against brother in mortal strife—if we were forced to rely upon the written history of the country. To the page of history the southern student turns, in vain, to learn the character of his fore-fathers: and to the battle-field the youthful patriot need not look for a monument to commemorate their deeds of glory. They have "no monument inscription stone,

Their race, their deeds, their names almost unknown."

In tradition only, are these things treasured up, and swiftly are they passing away who were actors in the scenes. While they moved amongst us, we felt not the importance of their testimony; but now they are gone, we feel that there is a blank in the page of our country's history which time can never fill.

We are happy to see, even at this late hour, a disposition awakened to save something from oblivion, and with this view, we offer to the public, through the medium of Orion, the following memoir of as brave a soldier as ever drew the sword in the holy cause of Freedom—Major Thomas Young.

We will present the record in his own words, and

"nothing extenuate,
Nor set down aught in malice."

I was born in Lawrence District, S. C., on the seventeenth of January, 1764. My father, Thomas Young, soon after removed to Union District, where I have lived to this day. In the spring of 1780, I think in April, Col. Brandon was encamped with a party of 70 or 80 whigs, about five miles below Union court-house, where Christopher Young now lives. Their object was to collect forces for the approaching campaign, and to keep a check upon the tories. They had taken prisoner one Adam Steedham, as vile a tory as ever lived. By some means Steedham escaped during the night, and notified the tories of Brandon's position. The whigs were attacked by a large body of the enemy before day and completely routed. On that occasion, my brother, John Young, was murdered. I shall never forget my feelings when told of his death. I do not believe I had ever used an oath before that day, but then I tore open my bosom, and swore that I would never rest till I had avenged his death. Subsequently a hundred tories felt the weight of my arm for the deed, and around Steedham's neck I fastened the rope as a reward for his cruelties. On the next day I left home in my shirt sleeves, and joined Brandon's party. Christopher Brandon and I joined at the same time, and the first engagement we were in, was at Stallions' in York District.

We had received intelligence of a party of tories, then stationed at Stallions'; a detachment of about fifty whigs, under Col. Brandon, moved to attack them. Before we arrived at the house in which they were fortified, we were divided into two parties. Capt. Love with a party of sixteen—of whom I was one—marched to attack the front, while Col. Brandon with the remainder, made a circuit to intercept those who should attempt to escape, and also to attack the rear. Mrs. Stallions was a sister of Capt. Love, and on the approach of her brother she ran out, and begged him not to fire upon the house. He told her it was too late now, and that their only chance for safety was to surrender. She ran back to the house and sprang upon the door step, which was pretty high. At this moment, the house was attacked in the rear by Col. Brandon's party, and Mrs. Stallions was killed by a ball shot through the opposite door. At the same moment with Brandon's attack, our party raised a shout and rushed forward. We fired several rounds which were briskly returned. It was not long, however, before the tories ran up a flag, first upon the end of a gun, but as that did not look exactly peaceful, a ball was put through the fellow's arm, and in a few moments it was raised on a ram-rod, and we ceased firing. While we were fighting a man was seen running through an open field near us. I raised my gun to shoot him, when some of our party exclaimed, "Don't fire; he is one of our own men." I drew down my gun, and in a moment he halted, wheeled round, and fired at us. Old Squire Kennedy (who was an excellent marksman) raised his rifle and brought him down. We had but one wounded, William Kennedy, who was shot by my side. I was attempting to fire in at the door of the house, when I saw two of the tories in the act of shooting at myself and Kennedy. I sprang aside and escaped, calling at the same time to my companion, but he was shot (while moving) through the wrist and thigh.

The loss of the tories was two killed, four wounded, and twenty-eight prisoners whom we sent to Charlotte, N. C. After the fight, Love and Stallions met and shed bitter tears; Stallions was dismissed on parole to bury his wife and arrange his affairs.

The next engagement I was in, was at King's Mountain, S. C., I believe on the 7th of October, 1780. I was under the command of Col. Brandon. Late in the evening, preceding the battle, we met Colonels Campbell, Shelby, Cleaveland, and Sevier, with their respective regiments, at the Cowpens, where they had been killing some beeves. As soon as we got something to eat, for we were very hungry and weary, we retired to sleep at random in the woods. I did not wake until broad day-light. In the morning we received intelligence that Major Ferguson was encamped somewhere near the Cherokee Ford, on Broad River. We pushed forward, but heard no tidings of the enemy. At a meeting-house, on the eastern side of the river, we discovered some signs and continued our pursuit for some distance, when a halt was ordered, and were on the point of sending out for some beeves, when we met George Watkins, a whig, who had been taken prisoner and was on his way home on parole. He gave us information of the position of the enemy.

A consultation of the officers was then held, and the command was given to Col. Campbell. Watkins had informed us that we were within a mile of the enemy. We were then formed into four divisions; who commanded each division I cannot now say. I think Col. Roebuck commanded the one I was in.

Major Ferguson had taken a very strong position upon the summit of the mountain, and it appeared like an impossibility to dislodge him, but we had come there to do it, and we were determined, one and all, to do it, or die trying. The attack was begun on the north side of the mountain. The orders were at the firing of the first gun, for every man to raise a whoop, rush forward, and fight his way as he best could. When our division came up to the northern base of the mountain, we dismounted, and Col. Roebuck drew us a little to the left and commenced the attack. I well remember how I behaved. Ben Hollingsworth and myself took right up the side of the mountain, and fought from tree to tree, our way to the summit. I recollect I stood behind one tree and fired until the bark was nearly all knocked off, and my eyes pretty well filled with it. One fellow shaved me pretty close, for his bullet took a piece out of my gun-stock. Before I was aware of it, I found myself apparently between my own regiment and the enemy, as I judged, from seeing the paper which the whigs wore in their hats, and the pine knots the tories wore in theirs, these being the badges of distinction.

On the top of the mountain, in the thickest of the fight, I saw Col. Williams fall, and a braver or a better man never died upon the field of battle. I had seen him but once before that day; it was in the beginning of the action, as he charged by me at full speed around the mountain; toward the summit a ball struck his horse under the jaw, when he commenced stamping as if he were in a nest of yellow jackets. Col. W. threw the reins over the animal's neck—sprang to the ground, and dashed onward.

The moment I heard the cry that Col. Williams was shot, I ran to his assistance, for I loved him as a father, he had ever been so kind to me, and almost always carried a cake in his pocket for me and his little son Joseph. They carried him into a tent, and sprinkled some water in his face. He revived, and his first words were, "For God's sake, boys, don't give up the hill!" I remember it as well as if it had occurred yesterday. I left him in the arms of his son Daniel, and returned to the field to avenge his fall. Col. Williams died next day, and was buried not far from the field of his glory.

Joseph Williams—who was a mere boy—and his brother Daniel, were, I think, subsequently massacred by the tories at Huy's station. I remember to have heard it told that they were surrounded by the tories, and during the fight a crib or outhouse near the building in which the whigs were stationed caught fire, and when they found there was no hope, Daniel Williams threw his father's pistols into the flames, exclaiming that he would rather see them burn, than go into the hands of a tory. Our loss at the battle of King's Mountain, was about twenty-five killed and wounded. The enemy lost above three hundred, who were left on the ground—among them Major Ferguson. We took, moreover, seven or eight hundred prisoners. Awful indeed was the scene of the wounded, the dying, and the dead on the field, after the carnage of that dreadful day. A few days after the battle, a court martial was held to try some of the tories who were known to be of the most outrageous and blood-thirsty character. About twenty were found guilty, but ten received a pardon or respite. Nine were hung, and the tenth was pinioned, awaiting his fate. It was now nearly dark. His brother, a mere lad, threw his arms around him, and set up a most piteous crying and screaming, as if he would go into convulsions. While the soldiers were attracted by his behaviour, he managed to cut the cords, and his brother escaped.

After the battle we marched upon the head waters of Cane Creek, in North Carolina, with our prisoners, where we all came very near starving to death. The country was very thinly settled, and provisions could not be had for love or money. I thought green pumpkins, sliced and fried, about the sweetest eating I ever had in my life! From this point we marched over into the Dutch settlements in the fork of Catawba and recruited, until we joined Gen. Morgan at Grindall Shoals.

The next engagement I was in, was at Hammond's store, on Bush River, somewhere near '96. Gen. Morgan was encamped at Grindall Shoals to keep the tories in check. He despatched Col. Washington with a detachment of militia, and about seventy dragoons, to attack a body of tories, who had been plundering the whigs. We came up with them at Hammond's store; in fact, we picked up several scattering ones, within about three miles of the place, from whom we learned all about their position.

When we came in sight, we perceived that the tories had formed in line on the brow of the hill opposite to us. We had a long hill to descend and another to rise. Col. Washington and his dragoons gave a shout, drew swords, and charged down the hill like madmen. The tories fled in every direction without firing a gun. We took a great many prisoners and killed a few. Here I must relate an incident which occurred on this occasion. In Washington's corps there was a boy of fourteen or fifteen, a mere lad, who in crossing Tiger River was ducked by a blunder of his horse. The men laughed and jeered at him very much, at which he got very mad, and swore that, boy or no boy, he would kill a man that day or die. He accomplished the former. I remember very well being highly amused at the little fellow charging round a crib after a tory, cutting and slashing away with his puny arm, till he brought him down.

We then returned to Morgan's encampment at Grindall Shoals, on the Packolette, and there we remained, eating beef and scouting through the neighborhood until we heard of Tarlton's approach. Having received intelligence that Col. Tarlton designed to cross the Packolette at Easternood Shoals above us, Gen. Morgan broke up his encampment early on the morning of the 16th, and retreated up the mountain road by Hancock's Ville, taking the left hand road not far above, in a direction toward the head of Thickety Creek. We arrived at the field of the Cowpens about sun-down, and were then told that there we should meet the enemy. The news was received with great joy by the army. We were very anxious for battle, and many a hearty curse had been vented against Gen. Morgan during that day's march, for retreating, as we thought, to avoid a fight. Night came upon us, yet much remained to be done. It was all important to strengthen the cavalry. Gen. Morgan knew well the power of Tarlton's legion, and he was too wily an officer not to prepare himself as well as circumstances would admit. Two companies of volunteers were called for. One was raised by Major Jolly of Union District, and the other, I think, by Major McCall. I attached myself to Major Jolly's company. We drew swords that night, and were informed we had authority to press any horse not belonging to a dragoon or an officer, into our service for the day.

It was upon this occasion I was more perfectly convinced of Gen. Morgan's qualifications to command militia, than I had ever before been. He went among the volunteers, helped them fix their swords, joked with them about their sweet-hearts, told them to keep in good spirits, and the day would be ours. And long after I laid down, he was going about among the soldiers encouraging them, and telling them that the old wagoner would crack his whip over Ben. (Tarlton) in the morning, as sure as they lived:

"Just hold up your heads, boys, three fires," he would say, "and you are free, and then when you return to your homes, how the old folks will bless you, and the girls kiss you, for your gallant conduct!" I don't believe he slept a wink that night!

But to the battle. Our pickets were stationed three miles in advance. Samuel Clowney was one of the picket guard, and I often heard him afterwards laugh at his narrow escape. Three of Washington's dragoons were out on a scout, when they came almost in contact with the advanced guard of the British army; they wheeled, and were pursued almost into camp. Two got in safely; one poor fellow, whose horse fell down, was taken prisoner. It was about day that the pickets were driven in.

(Will be finished in the next number.)

EDITOR'S DEPARTMENT.

COUNTRY PULPIT ELOQUENCE.—Save the mark! so far as the country region around about us is concerned. Rambling in the western part of Georgia, we arrived one Saturday evening, at a country inn, with the design of "laying by," as the phrase runs, until after the Sabbath. On that day we accompanied our host to service at a meeting-house some mile or two distant; where our patience was wearied, despite our devotional feeling—by no less than three long-winded "discourses," as destitute of any ray of interest or reason, and as completely outrageous of every dictum of oratory, rhetoric, and even grammar, as they well could be.

"Splendid sarments," commented our host, as we rode homewards.

"Which?" replied we. "The first, second, or third?" for having service but once a month, it is a custom to sit out several long discourses, consecutively, like the famished tourist in the desert, when his parched lips meet the cooling stream, or the wrecked and starved mariner when he again finds food within his grasp. All the cases—an intemperance, turning a blessing into an evil, and yielding as little real good, as did the eleven beds which the Irish traveller, who, not having slept for many nights, piled up, one upon the other, in order that he might have a good wholesale nap, and make up for lost time. "Which," we asked, "do you admire so much? You certainly jest in praising the ranting of Mr. ——, the jargon of ——, or the rigmarole of ——"

Our friend looked at us in astonishment. "I'm afeard," said he, "that you have been to them minister-making machines. Breatherin —— is powerful men—powerful: they preach the gospel—the plain simple gospel; none of your new-fangled, high-flying preaching, that takes a week to study it out, and then has to be read after that—stuff that nobody understands and that only tickles the ear. I don't want no edicated preachers about me. The apostles never went to college. Larning only makes 'em proud and worldly."

And so it is, not only are many of those who fill our country pulpits deplorably ignorant, but they glory in their ignorance, and hundreds of their flocks would look with pious horror upon the introduction of any shadow of intelligence or sense. Schools and colleges for the minister—who of all men should be the accomplished and universal scholar—are looked upon as unnecessary, undesirable and unchristian.

This is much to be deplored. In its religious effect, it excites a sneer and disgust in the intelligent mind, not, alas, against the speaker only, but his great theme—a feeling which often remains through life. In its mental effect, it leaves the minds of the hearers unenlightened and unimproved. The great theme of a future life, should always be presented by those, and in a manner that will win at least respect from all listeners: and the pulpit should ever be a fount of instruction, mental as well as moral.

To take up arms in advocacy of the expediency and importance of ministerial education is not at all our purpose. Many in the South, many worthy men, would strenuously dissent from our opinion—passing strange as such dissent may seem in this age and land. We take it, however, that few of such illiberal bigots are among the readers of ORION. Our thought was simply to present some specimens of country pulpit eloquence, which have from time to time come under our notice: specimens which, though laughable enough, are seriously, no laughing matter. Hear us, reader, and then sorrow that such

A REVOLUTIONARY PATRIOT OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

[Concluded.]

The morning of the 17th of January, 1781, was bitterly cold. We were formed in order of battle, and the men were slapping their hands together to keep warm—an exertion not long necessary.

The battle field was almost a plain with a ravine on both hands, and very little under growth in front or near us. The regulars, under the command of Col. Howard, a very brave man, were formed in two ranks, their right flank resting upon the head of the ravine on the right. The militia were formed on the left of the regulars, under the command of Col. Pickens, their left flank resting near the head of the ravine on the left. The cavalry formed in rear of the centre, or rather in rear of the left wing of the regulars. About sun-rise, the British line advanced at a sort of trot, with a loud halloo. It was the most beautiful line I ever saw. When they shouted, I heard Morgan say, "They give us the British halloo, boys, give them the Indian halloo, by G——;" and he galloped along the lines, cheering the men, and telling them not to fire until we could see the whites of their eyes. Every officer was crying don't fire! for it was a hard matter for us to keep from it.

I should have said the British line advanced under cover of their artillery; for it opened so fiercely upon the centre, that Col. Washington moved his cavalry from the centre towards the right wing.

The militia fired first. It was for a time, pop—pop—pop—and then a whole volley; but when the regulars fired, it seemed like one sheet of flame from right to left. Oh! it was beautiful! I have heard old Col. Fair say often, that he believed John Savage fired the first gun in this battle. He was riding to and fro, along the lines, when he saw Savage fix his eye upon a British officer; he stepped out of the ranks, raised his gun—fired, and he saw the officer fall.

After the first fire, the militia retreated, and the cavalry covered their retreat. They were again formed and renewed the attack, and we retired to the rear. They fought for some time, and retreated again—and then formed a second time. In this I can hardly be mistaken, for I recollect well that the cavalry was twice, during the action, between our army and the enemy. I have understood that one of the retreats was ordered by mistake by one of Morgan's officers. How true this is I cannot say.

After the second forming, the fight became general and unintermitting. In the hottest of it, I saw Col. Brandon coming at full speed to the rear, and waving his sword to Col. Washington. In a moment the command to charge was given, and I soon found that the British cavalry had charged the American right. We made a most furious charge, and cutting through the British cavalry, wheeled and charged them in the rear. In this charge, I exchanged my tackey for the finest horse I ever rode; it was the quickest swap I ever made in my life!

At this moment the bugle sounded. We, about half formed and making a sort of circuit at full speed, came up in rear of the British line, shouting and charging like madmen. At this moment Col. Howard gave the word "charge bayonets!" and the day was ours. The British broke, and throwing down their guns and cartouch boxes, made for the wagon road, and did the prettiest sort of running!

After this Major Jolly and seven or eight of us, resolved upon an excursion to capture some of the baggage. We went about twelve miles, and captured two British soldiers, two negroes, and two horses laden with portmanteaus. One of the portmanteaus belonged to a paymaster in the British service, and contained gold. Jolly insisted upon my returning with the prize to camp, while he pursued a little farther. I did so. Jolly's party dashed onward, and soon captured an armorer's wagon, with which they became so much engaged that they forgot all about me. I rode along for some miles at my leisure, on my fine gray charger, talking to my prisoners, when, all at once I saw, coming in advance, a party, which I soon discovered to be British. I knew it was no time to consider now; so I wheeled, put spurs to my horse, and made down the road in hopes of meeting Jolly and his party. My horse was stiff, however, from the severe exercise I had given him that morning, and I soon found that they were gaining upon me. I wheeled abruptly to the right into a cross road, but a party of three or four dashed through the woods and intercepted me. It was now a plain case, and I could no longer hope to engage one at a time. My pistol was empty, so I drew my sword and made battle. I never fought so hard in my life. I knew it was death any how, and I resolved to sell my life as dearly as possible.

In a few minutes one finger on my left hand was split open; then I received a cut on my sword arm by a parry which disabled it. In the next instant a cut from a sabre across my forehead, (the scar of which I shall carry to my grave,) the skin slipped down over my eyes, and the blood blinded me so that I could see nothing. Then came a thrust in the right shoulder blade, then a cut upon the left shoulder, and a last cut (which you can feel for yourself) on the back of my head—and I fell upon my horse's neck. They took me down, bound up my wounds, and placed me again on my horse a prisoner of war.

When they joined the party in the main road, there were two tories who knew me very well—Littlefield and Kelly. Littlefield cocked his gun, and swore he would kill me. In a moment nearly twenty British soldiers drew their swords, and cursing him for a d—d coward, for wanting to kill a boy without arms and a prisoner—ran him off. Littlefield did not like me, and for a very good reason. While we were at Grindall Shoals with Morgan, he once caught me out, and tried to take my gun away from me. I knocked him down with it, and as he rose I clicked it, and told him if he didn't run I'd blow him through. He did not long hesitate which of the two to choose.

I asked Kelly not to tell the British who I was, and I do not think the fellow did. Col. Tarlton sent for me, and I rode by his side for several miles. He was a very fine looking man, with rather a proud bearing, but very gentlemanly in his manners. He asked me a great many questions, and I told him one lie, which I have often thought of since. In reply to his query whether Morgan was reinforced before the battle? I told him "he was not, but that he expected a reinforcement every minute." "He asked me how many dragoons Washington had." I replied that "he had seventy, and two volunteer companies of mounted militia—but you know they won't fight." "By G—d!" he quickly replied, "they did to-day, though!" I begged him to parole me, but he said, "if he did, I should go right off and turn to fighting again." I then told him he could get three men in exchange for me, and he replied—

"Very well, when we get to Cornwallis's army, you shall be paroled or exchanged; and mean while, I'll see that your wounds are taken care of."

We got to Hamilton Ford, on Broad River, about dark. Just before we came to the river, a British dragoon came up at full speed, and told Col. Tarlton that Washington was close behind in pursuit. It was now very dark, and the river was said to be swimming. The British were not willing to take water. Col. Tarlton flew into a terrible passion, and drawing his sword, swore he would cut down the first man who hesitated. They knew him too well to hesitate longer. During the confusion, a young Virginian by the name of Deshaser (also a prisoner) and myself, managed to get into the woods. In truth a British soldier had agreed to let us escape, and to desert if we would assist him in securing the plunder he had taken.

We slipped away one at a time up the river, Deshaser first, then myself. I waited what I thought a very long time for the British soldier, and he came not. At last I began to think the British were across, and I gave a low whistle—Deshaser answered me, and we met. It was now very dark and raining when we came to the Packolette. I could not find the ford, and it was well, for the river was swimming. We therefore made our way up the river, and had not gone far before we approached a barn. It had a light in it, and I heard a cough. We halted and reconnoitred, and finding it occupied by some British soldiers, we pressed on and soon arrived at old Captain Grant's, where I was glad to stop. The old man and his lovely daughter washed and dressed my wounds, and in looking over the bag of plunder which the soldier had given us, they found a fine ruffled shirt, which I put on and went to bed. I shall never forget that girl or the old man for their kindness!

On the next day I left with Deshaser, and arrived at home that evening, where I was confined by a violent fever for eight or ten days; but thanks to the kind nursing and attention of old Mrs. Brandon, I recovered. I now slept in the woods for about three weeks, waiting for some of the whigs to come in and commence operations. I was concerned about a horse. The British soldiers, when they took me, dismounted me from the fine charger I captured at the Cowpens, and put me on a pacing pony. One day I met old Molly Willard riding a very fine sorrel horse, and told her we must swap. She wouldn't listen to it—but I replied that there was no use in talking, the horse I would have, and the exchange was made not much to the old woman's satisfaction, for she didn't love the whigs; I don't believe the Willards have forgiven me for that horse swap to this day.

Soon after this I joined a detachment of whigs under Col. Brandon, and scouted through the country till we reached the siege at Fort Motte. There I remained for several days, when we joined a detachment under command of Col. Hampton, to take Orangeburg. The state troops, under Col. Hampton, outmarched us, for we had a piece of artillery to manage. We arrived the morning after them. The tories were lodged in a brick house, and kept up a monstrous shouting and firing to very little purpose. As soon as the piece of artillery was brought to bear upon the house, a breach was made through the gable end; then another, a little lower; then about the centre, and they surrendered.

I then joined a party of dragoons under Capt. Boykin, at the solicitation of Capt. Giles, to capture some horses we heard were billeted out by the British, near Bacon's Bridge, in the low country. It was a most hazardous expedition, and required great courage and prudence. Capt. Boykin had both. We went to the hotel and called for the hostler. Capt. Boykin drew his pistol, cocked it, and told him if he did not open the stable door, he would shoot him dead. You may rest assured he did not long consider about it! They got three very fine animals: two stallions and a gelding. Neither Giles nor I got a horse, and we were in no very good humor, as we knew we should have to go back at so rapid a pace that our nags could not stand it. Sure enough, after one day and night's travel, our horses began to fail, and we resolved to take the woods; but Boykin begged us to try and keep up, and as we soon should come to another billet of horses, we should have the first choice. Well, next day we did come upon a fine lot of horses, wild as devils. Giles and I went in, and I soon caught a yellow sorrel mare. Giles, who was an excellent judge of horse flesh, was struck with her form, and said to me, "Young, if you will let me have that mare, I will help you catch any horse in the lot!" I gave her to him, and picked me out a bay mare. Time proved that Giles was correct in his judgment, as the yellow mare was never caught in a chase, or beaten in a race afterwards. We were all now well mounted, and pushed off to join our detachment above.

When we arrived at Granby, we were nearly all discharged. Col. Brandon, Major Jolly and myself, resolved to make an excursion to 96—where the siege were then going on.

Here I remained during the siege. As we every day got our parallels nearer the garrison, we could see them very plain when they went out to a brook or spring for water. The Americans had constructed a sort of moving battery, but as the cannon of the fort were brought to bear upon it, they were forced to abandon the use of it. It had not been used for some time, when an idea struck old Squire Kennedy, (who was an excellent marksman,) that he could pick off a man now and then as they went to the spring. He and I took our rifles and went into the woods to practice at 200 yards. We were arrested and taken before an officer, to whom we gave our excuse and design. He laughed, and told us to practice no more, but to try our luck from the battery if we wanted to, so we took our position, and as a fellow came down to the spring, Kennedy fired and he fell; several ran out and gathered round him, and among them I noticed one man raise his head, and look round as if he wondered where that shot could have come from. I touched my trigger and he fell, and we made off, for fear it might be our time to fall next.

After the siege of 96, I returned to my old neighborhood, and was engaged in various scouting expeditions till peace was declared. I was on a scouting expedition to Mudlick, under Col. Brandon. We were all mounted. We saw two spies, before we came upon the tories, and pursued them to the creek. Col. Brandon sent out Major Jolly with a flank guard to prevent their outflanking us—they were on the opposite side of the creek, and commanded the ford, so that we could not cross. Jolly and I approached very near; so near that a cousin of mine, William Young, hailed us and inquired who commanded. A good deal was said to keep us engaged. Young waved his sword to me several times, and hallooed to me to go away; a moment after we were fired upon by a party who had crept up the creek through the bushes. A shot went under Jolly's horse's belly, and another shaved my horse's forelegs. We returned the fire, but did no damage, save putting a ball through Young's horse's nose. We then retreated, under the hope that they would pursue us, but they did not.

This same cousin of mine had offered a hundred guineas to any man who would bring me into 96. In one of our excursions we heard of a band of tories being concealed in a very dense thicket, over on Sandy River; it was said they had a great deal of plunder. A party, of which I recollect Col. Brandon, Col. Casey, Col. Hughes, and Major Jolly, were members, went to attack them. We got there early in the day, and it was not long before we had possession of the place. In the fight I took a little fellow, by the name of Tom Moore, prisoner. I ran him for some distance, shot at him, and broke his arm. When I took him back Tom Salter wanted to kill him, because Moore had once had him prisoner, and would in all probability have killed him, if he had not escaped. I cocked my gun, and told them no! he was my man, and I would shoot the first one who harmed him. During this skirmish I witnessed rather an amusing scene between Col. Hughes and a tory. Hughes had dismounted to get a chance to shoot at some fellow through the bushes, when a tory sprang upon his horse and dashed away. Hughes discovered it in time, fired, and put a ball through the hind tree of the saddle and the fellow's thigh. The tory fell, and Hughes got his horse. In this excursion we got a great deal of plunder, which had been concealed by the tories.

Once after this, I was taken by a party of "Outliers," (a name given to the Greys,) the most notorious and abandoned plunderers and murderers of that gloomy period. On account of the kindness I had once shown to one of them while a prisoner, in my charge, I was set at liberty without being hurt.

While we were in North Carolina recruiting, an incident occurred which [illegible] may be well enough to relate. One Capt. Reid was at a neighbor's house, in York District, on a visit. The landlady saw two men approaching the house whom she knew to be tories, and told Capt. Reid he had better escape, for they would kill him. He replied, no!—they had been his neighbors; he had known Love and Sadler all his life, and had nothing to fear from them. He walked out into the yard, offered them his hand, and they killed him. His mother, a very old woman, came to where we were encamped in North Carolina. One morning we were called out on parade, and this old woman came before us, leaning upon the arms of two officers. She drew from her bosom the bloody pocket book of her son, and three times attempted to go to her knees, but was prevented by the officers who supported her.

Col. Brandon stepped out and asked if there were any here willing to volunteer to avenge her wrongs. Twenty-five stepped out at once. I was one of the number. We started, rode all night, halted in the day, kept watch in the woods, but slept not; the next night we arrived at old Love's. One part of our company was to attack the house, another the barn. The house was attacked, and the door broken down by a powerful man, by the name of Maddox, who was afterwards killed at King's Mountain. In staving open the door, he floored old Love and knocked some of his teeth out. At this moment a cry was raised that they were in the barn, and to the barn we all rushed. One of our men fired through the door and killed one of the murderers, the other was killed in the skirmish. What is most strange about the matter is, that another man was sleeping with them, and in the meleé he escaped unhurt. We now felt that we had done all that was required of us, and returned to our quarters in North Carolina.

After the declaration of peace in 1783, Major Thomas Young married, and settled in Union District, upon the spot where he now lives, where he has brought up a large family. He is beloved by his neighbors for his kindness, and respected by all for the scars he received in the cause of Liberty.

If the perusal of this sketch should give as much pleasure to the reader, as its preparation has given to us, we shall be amply repaid. May the venerable patriot's evening of life be spent in peace, and a richer reward for his services than earth can give, await him beyond the grave.

TO THE RAINBOW.

Whence comest thou, mysterious bow of Heaven,
Painted on clouds, and born amid the storm?
Where dost thou slumber when the sun's bright ray
Has lit thy beauty—then dispelled thy charm?
Is there no language in thy silent spell?
Though fleeting, sure thou comest not in vain;
Tell, thou bright arch, of that all powerful voice
Which gave thee birth—that to the troubled waters
Spoke, as when on earth He stilled the tempest's roar,
And whispered "peace, be still." Yet man, so prone
To unbelief, "would seek of Heaven a sign."
And God in love remembering "we are dust,"
Shadowed thy colors forth—and now we turn
From deep toned thunderings, and lightnings fierce,
To thee, thou "bow of promise;" for no more
Shall Ocean seek to leave his cavern'd cell,
Or clouds descend to earth in watery sheets,
Until one ark alone is Heaven's peculiar care.

gle, but the other cannot, whilst there are valor and wisdom to direct the councils of a nation.

Thomas Heyward was one of the five signers of the Declaration of Independence, who returned home and took up arms in defence of that independence which they had declared. His colleagues from South Carolina, Rutledge, Lynch and Middleton, did the same, but it so happened that those from the other states were almost all employed in some civil pursuit. The greater part of them remained in Congress a number of years, and others were sent on foreign missions. This circumstance, though it redounds to the credit of the Carolina delegates, is not mentioned to reflect on the character of those illustrious men who composed the Congress of '76. Although they did not take up arms in defence of the Declaration which they had made, they were nevertheless, as devotedly engaged in securing its blessings. No man whose name appears on that sacred charter of our country's glory and independence ever faltered or became cold in her cause.

In fighting for his country, Thomas Heyward was severely wounded. He had the honor of sealing with his blood the written appeal which he had signed with his hand. His was the glory of first declaring his country's freedom and independence, and then of fighting and shedding his blood to maintain them. He was afterwards elected one of the judges of South Carolina, and discharged the duties of that office with credit and ability until 1789, when he resigned his seat on the bench, and retired to private life.

THE BLOODY SCOUT.

The tenth of May, 1781, will ever be remembered in the traditionary history of Spartanburgh as a day on which were acted some of the most horrid scenes of the American Revolution. Perhaps there is not another instance, during the whole of our revolutionary struggle, in which so many cold-blooded assassinations were committed on the same day, without even the semblance of excuse or justification. It was a savage butchery—not in battle or in manly contest, but treacherously, in the house of the victim and in the presence of his family. In order to accomplish their fiendish purposes, the murderers had to resort to a base and cowardly stratagem.

Thomas Young's cousin?

For some time previous to this memorable day, the whigs of Spartanburgh had been enjoying the smiles and blessings of peace and security, but all at once, and without the least warning or suspicion, they were visited by a corps of tories under the command of Captain Bill Young. This tory captain and his bloody band were from the District of Laurens, then known as Craven County, which, at one time, included all the upper country. They first made their appearance at James Miller's, a prominent whig, living in the upper part of Spartanburgh. Having thrown aside the tory badge, which was a sprig of pine-top, and adopted a piece of paper fastened to their hats, "LIBERTY OR DEATH," they were every [illegible] for a company of "liberty men." An old man, a [illegible], by the name of James Knox, who happened to be at Miller's [illegible]

[illegible] band made its appearance, eagerly [illegible] an extended hand of friendship and good faith. He was instantly cut down by the sabre of a horseman, and horribly mangled even after he fell. Miller, who saw from a distance this fatal adventure, quickly made his escape unperceived by the bloody scout. Knox lived until the next day, although his head was literally hewn to pieces. He was carried into the house by the wife and daughter of Mr. Miller, who endeavored to dress his wounds as well as they could, and administered to him all the comfort in their power.

The next house visited by the "Bloody Scout" was John Barry's, who had long borne the commission of a captain in the service of his country, and who had been a most active and zealous whig from the commencement of the Revolution. Fortunately, Captain Barry was not at home, and he thus escaped the fate which had just befallen poor Knox. While the tories were in front of Barry's house, and on the eve of leaving it, William Caldwell rode up, supposing the company to be, as their badge purported, on the side of liberty and their country. He was instantly fired at by one of the scout, and the ball passed through his horse's jaws. Notwithstanding the severe wound which his horse received, he was able to make his escape in spite of hot pursuit. Mr. Caldwell was living, a few years since, in the same neighborhood where this scene occurred, in the enjoyment of health, and much respected for his moral worth and revolutionary services. The report of the gun fired at Caldwell was heard by James Alexander, from whom the writer of this article has obtained all the particulars of this memorable day. Mr. Alexander was proceeding to find out the cause of this gun being fired, when he met a young woman flying from the house, who informed him that the tories were there. He changed the direction of his course very quickly, but not before he had been seen by some of the bloody band. They immediately gave him a close pursuit, and would unquestionably have overtaken him, had he not sprang from his horse and made his way through the woods to a foot-log across the river, which was unknown to the tories. He abandoned his horse to the chances of war, but fortunately the animal was lost sight of in the pursuit of his master, and Mr. Alexander had the satisfaction of making his own escape, and finding his horse at home when he arrived there.

The "Bloody Scout" went next to the house of John Nichols, who was an old man, and kept a mill. He was a true whig, and ever ready to do all in his power to serve his country. All the respect shown to his gray hairs was an attempt to despatch him by the sword instead of the pistol. His head and shoulders were horribly cut and mangled, but he recovered from the wounds, and lived many years afterwards. The old man used to say, however, that his mind was not the same after his recovery, and evidently his intellect was, in every way, much impaired, and his memory almost destroyed.

From Nichols' this murderous band proceeded to Howel's, where they found John Caldwell and Thomas Dunlap, two very active and prominent whigs. These gentlemen were despatched by pistol shot before they were aware of the true character of the scout. Thence they passed on to John Woods', a bold and active whig, and particularly obnoxious to the tories. He was also shot dead before he knew the company to be tories. They came next to the house of James Wood, a gentleman who it seems was still more the object of their hatred. He was taken from his house and put to death hard by, under circumstances of peculiar atrocity.

The next bloody deed was the murder of John Snoddy, whom they encountered at Berwick's Iron Works. Mr. Snoddy was crossing the bridge when he saw the "Bloody Scout," and suspected them, notwithstanding the false colors under which they were marching. He endeavored to make his escape by cutting through the woods, as soon as he passed the bridge, but he was pursued, overtaken and put to death. From Berwick's Iron Works they went to Fair Forest, and there met Edward Hampton—a brother of the late General Wade Hampton—who was a very distinguished whig, and one of the best horsemen in the State. Mr. Hampton no sooner saw the party than he recognized them, and endeavored to make his escape—but he met the same sad fate as the other victims of this diabolical onset. In a former number of these Incidents,* it was stated that Edward Hampton was murdered in the bosom of his family. This, however, was a mistake, as he was not at home when killed. He was shot through the body, and the waistcoat which he had on, and through which the ball passed, was preserved by his family, and it is believed is still in the possession of some of his descendants.

After killing Hampton, and the day being pretty well spent, the tories thought it prudent to leave a neighborhood in which they had committed so many murders. The next day Captain John Barry raised his company of militia, and started in pursuit of the "Bloody Scout," but did not overtake them. Whilst on the pursuit, in Laurens District, they came to the house of an old tory by the name of Franks, who had a very bountiful supply of bacon on hand. The whigs, beginning to feel quite hungry, not having tasted food for twenty-four hours, thought there was no great harm in quartering themselves, for a short time, in the smoke-house of an enemy. Consequently, they not only made free use, for the time being, of the old tory's bacon, but provided themselves with rations for several days. David Anderson acted as commissary on this occasion, and took the responsibility of judging how much would be a proper supply for the company. It is said he proved quite a liberal caterer, and that Franks' smoke-house required neither lock nor key after the whigs left it. This was in 1781. In 1783 peace was concluded, and the independence of the country acknowledged. Some years afterward, the people in the upper country who had been so long without law, began to have a hankering after something new, and procured a court at "Ninety-Six." One of the first cases brought in this court was docketed Myer Franks vs. David Anderson.—Trespass. Many years had passed by, and a good many things which had occurred in the Revolution had been forgotten, but the taking of Myer Franks' bacon. It dwelt in the memory of the old tory like the elopement of his daughter and her jewels in the memory of Shylock. The emptiness of his smoke-house seemed ever afterwards to haunt his imagination, and it is likely, too, that he suffered a good deal in the flesh; the ensuing summer, for meat was an article which could not always be procured in those days.

Be all this as it may, however, Myer Franks brought suit for his bacon, as soon as the luxury of the law was allowed him by the establishment of a court of "Ninety-Six." He thought it rather troublesome, or was so advised by his counsel, to bring suit against all those who assisted in eating his bacon, and therefore singled out Anderson, the commissary, as the object of his legal vengeance. The case was called, and a host of witnesses were in attendance to prove the fact on the part of the plaintiff, and the use to which the bacon was appropriated by the defendant. After getting through the testimony, his honor, the presiding judge, ordered the case to be stricken from the docket, and left Myer Franks to seek redress in brooding still longer over his misfortunes.

SELF-ABANDONMENT.

A FRAGMENT FROM A DRAMA.

Oh friend, but thou art come to see me die.
I parted from thee, as I think, in tears,
Though little cause had either then to weep.
Alas! in tears, that we should meet again.
But they have been my rightful property,
And little need have I to boast of them,
Since 'twas my wilful, sad perversity,
That made them parcel of my common lot!

Some men, I'm fain to think, are born to tears;
They have a seemly fitness in some eyes,
And would not, with the same propriety
Glisten in other men's. I pray thee weep,
Thy tears will waken mine, and they will flow
To join again in such dear company,
Making, with grief, a medicine for grief,
Since Sorrow hath its sweetness.
Oh how much,
How very much of blessing have I lost
In Life's vain commerce. Too much restlessness
And much too perfect freedom, have but driven
My barque upon the rocks. Alas! no help
Had I to steer her, Eustace, chastfully,
After we parted. Wilful, on the seas,—
When thy dear love and headful hand were gone,
I headlong went; considering not the waves,
The wind's caprice, the storm-conceiving sky,
The fraudulent-lurking rocks, that, in the deep,
Buried their heads, and hushed their wonted roar,
Till I was wreck'd forever!
Thou art late,
Too late, my friend, to save me. I am lost!
The light is gone, the seas are o'er my head,
And the bleak wind, from off his topmost tower,
Howls with his thunder-accents to the storm—
Bidding my execution instantly!

PENSION APPLICATION S. 10309
17 April 1838

STATE OF SOUTH CAROLINA
UNION DISTRICT TO WIT:

On this day, to wit, the seventeenth day of April in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-eight (1838) personally appeared before JOHN J. PRATT, Judge of the Court of Ordinary of Union District in the State of South Carolina, THOMAS YOUNG, a resident of the aforesaid State and District and aged seventy-four years, who being first duly sworn in open Court according to law doth on his oath make the following declaration in order to obtain the benefit of the pension made by the act of Congress passed the seventh day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-two (1832), that he volunteered in the service of the State of South Carolina under Capt. Benjamin Jolly, of Col. Thomas Brandon's (Regiment) about the last of May or the first of June in the year 1780.

At the time of his volunteering, he was a resident of Ninety-Six District, which place of residence is in the subdivision now known by the name of Union District. He marched thence to North Carolina in Rowan County and returned in the latter part of the summer to York District, as the territory was known by that name and was engaged in a skirmish with a body of Tories at STALLION'S House. He then returned to North Carolina and met Col. Williams above Charlotte and was united with his Corps and after uniting with other troops, evacuated to KING'S MOUNTAIN and was actively engaged during that memorable conflict.

After this engagement, the Corps to which he was attached, returned to their homes or to the neighborhood of their former residences, but still remaining on duty subject to the command of their officers. His next adventure was that of serving under the same officers with General Morgan at GRINDAL SHOALS on the Pacolet River and marching thence to the COWPENS, where he was engaged in that engagement against Col. Tarleton on the 17 Jan 1781. In this engagement, he received many and severe wounds, was made a prisoner, and carried near the camp of Gen. Cornwallis, whence he made his escape. He was then disabled by his wounds for near one month. He then volunteered under Captain JOSEPH HUGHES and marched to Buckhead and attended the seige of that Fort. But, before that Fort was taken, went off with a detachment against ORANGEBURG and took that Fort under the command of Gen. Sumpter. He was thrice under the command of Sumpter.

He marched to GRANBY on Congaree River where he was dismissed from service. He then proceeded voluntarily to NINETY-SIX and joined his old Company under Captain Jolly, who was under the command of Col. Brandon, of PICKEN'S BRIGADE. He continued in the seige laid to this fort until the seige was raised. He was then detached with the Corps to which he belonged to scout the UP country and prevent the mischief and depredations of the Tories, where he continued in service to the end of the war.

THE COURT PRONOUNCED THE FOLLOWING INTERROGATIONS:

Where and in what year were you born?
ANS: 17 Jan 1764 in LAURENS DISTRICT of this State.

Have you any record of your age?
ANS: No. But CHRISTOPHER BRANDON says that he heard that I was born in February 1764.

Where were you living at the time of your volunteering? Where have you lived since the Revolutionary War and where do you live now?
ANS: I have lived since my first recollection in this District and in the same neighborhood.

Put 4th: How were you called into service?
ANS: Volunteered.

Put 5th: State the name of some of the regular officers who were with the troops where you served.
ANS: I have as fully as my recollection will serve...answered this interrogatory in my declaration.

Put 6th: Did you ever receive a discharge from service?
ANS: I never did. I continued until the end of the War, when I was formally dismissed from service without any written discharge.

He hereby relinquished his every claim in the future to a pension or an annuity that is incompatible with the present claim and he declares that his name is not on the pension of any agency in any State, except that of South Carolina, the Roll of involved pensioner, under the Act of Congress, passed the 4th day of February 1822, of the Court of Ordinary.

And the said Court does hereby declare its opinion that the above named applicant was a revolutionary soldier and served as he stated. I, John J. Pratt, Judge of the Court of Ordinary, do hereby certify that the foregoing contains the original proceedings of the said Court in the matter of application of THOMAS YOUNG for a pension. In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and private seal, there being no public seal, this 17 day of Lord 1838.

Others too must have suffered from the flinty rocks over which they hurriedly passed and re-passed during the engagement. As an instance of the all-absorbing effect of the excitements surrounding them, when the next morning the mountaineers were directed to discharge their guns—"I fired my old musket," said YOUNG, "charged in time of the battle with two musket balls, as I had done every time during the engagement; and the recoil, in this case, was dreadful, but I had not noticed it in the action."

COL. THOS. BRANDON-Says Maj. T. YOUNG: Col. Thomas Brandon was a native of Pennsylvania. He came to this country when quite a young man, a good many years before the war of the Revolution. He married, before the war, ELIZABETH McCOOL, who owned the Ferry now owned by Scaife. He entered the service as a Captain in the Spartan Regiment in 1775. He became Colonel of the 2nd Spartan Regiment when it formed sometime before the fall of Charleston. At the head of this he continued till the close of the war, and with it, or part of it, he was in most of the battles. He was at Musgrove's, Kings Mountain, Cowpens, and many small affairs. After the war he as a Brigadier General, member of the Legislature, etc."

p. 47 COL. THOS. BRANDON- George Brandon, the father of Col. Thos. Brandon, lived on Tinker Creek, a strict Presbyterian. Col. T. Brandon lived in the time of the war, 2 miles from Union Courthouse, near where Ellis now lives. JOHN BRANDON lived near W. Kennedy, on land now owned by his grandson, Benj. BRANDON. He was there prior to 1764. THOMAS YOUNG, son-in-law of GEORGE BRANDON, settled near his brother-in-law, Col. Thos. Brandon, about 1764. He had previously resided in Laurens District, and his son: JOHN was killed at Brandon's defeat, and THOS. turned soldier forthwith.

p. 49 MR. SAYE took notes of Maj. Jos McJunkin, MAJOR THOMAS YOUNG, C. Brandon, Maj. John Jeffries, Wm. Sims, Sr., Mrs. Angelica Nott, Sam'l Smith, Amos Lee and others.

p. 57 BRANDON'S DEFEAT, by THOMAS YOUNG

The scene of Brandon's defeat is four miles South of Unionville on waters of Fairforest. He had stopped to take a check at the head of a large hollow. The Tories were led by one Adam Stidham (Steedham). The Whigs, being taken by surprise, ran without striking a blow. It was a complete rout. BROWN, a half-brother of Gen. Morgan, was killed; also one of the Scotts and JOHN YOUNG (MPM-brother of Maj. Thomas Young). Old Samuel Clowney, Colonel Clowney's father, said he didn't put the bit in his beast's mouth, but mounted him, and whipped out of the way. Brown was buried on the spot near the place where the widow POLLY YOUNG now lives. It is near the road. Major YOUNG, in his lifetime, pointed out the very spot. A bush grew up from the grave and he requested that it should never be cut down.

p. 57 BRANDON was not altogether free from blame in this affair. He was brave, but seemed to be too careless for a good officer. He was sometimes charged with cruelty. Brandon lies buried four miles east of Union Courthouse at the spot then known as Brown's Creek Presbyterian Church. (MPM- Union Cem.) The church has since been removed to the village. He was buried with military honors. A horse accoutred as for the battle-- with holsters, pistols, swords and even his military boots in the stirrups. The military were out in full force. In person, he was chunky and compactly built. Thomas was his given name. HE WAS UNCLE TO MAJ. THOMAS YOUNG; and father of Thomas, William, James, and a daughter named Jane, and another Ann, and still another Elizabeth. They have all left the state. At the battle of Cowpens, as an instance of his humanity, his NEPHEW- THOMAS YOUNG, who was but a boy and had just joined Washington the night before, was approached by a stal- wart British dragoon. Brandon saw his danger, and galloping up, struck up his sword and killed the Briton. TOM YOUNG was placed in that battle behind a Frenchman who had served in Pulaski's Legion, who proved himself a most capital swordsman. Seeing the youth of YOUNG, he said to him, "Don't be scared, my son; I can cut my way through the British columns at anytime."--and he could do it.

p. 59 A Tory named Wm. Lee, who lived on Tyger, in Union, committed many depredations, and among them robbed the mother of THOMAS YOUNG. At the close of the war, he left the country.

Rev. J. D. Bailey, SOME HEROES OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION, Band & White, Printers, Spartanburg, S.C. 1924. pp. 250 thru 266. "THE LIFE OF MAJOR THOMAS YOUNG".

In his invaluable writings, published about seventy- five years ago, that eminent Presbyterian divine and noted local historian, REV. JAMES H. SAYE, says:

(MPM-gives quotation from "Memoirs of Major Joseph McJunkin, already quoted in this article.) Mr. David Anderson Thomas, a soldier of the Confederacy, and direct descendant of a Revolutionary hero, Colonel William Farr, tells the writer that he remembers MAJOR YOUNG well, and more than once has seen him lift his hat and exhibit those scars. When we think that at this day (June 1924), we have among us those who have looked upon the person of real soldiers, and beheld the scars that were inflicted by Britons in the contest for Independence, the time of that momentous event is not very far-back at all.

Having before us a copy of Major Young's reminiscences, related by himself, we can assure our readers that the following events narrated are authentic.
(MPM-the "Orion" Magazine article then follows in its entirety.)

This section then ends: Peace, the boon for which THOMAS YOUNG fought so long, and for which he suffered so severely, having been won, he married and settled not far from Union, where he brought up a large family. An admirer said of him: "He is beloved by his neighbors for his kindness, and respected by all for the scars he received in the cause of liberty."

The venerable hero passed away from all earthly scenes, November 7, 1848, at the advanced age of eighty-three years, nine months and twenty days. He is buried in the old Union Cemetery, about two miles east of Union, not far from the present Monarch Cotton Mill. His grave is only marked by a government marker, placed by the Daughters of the American Revolution.

A chapter of men in Union have recently honored him and honored themselves by the name--THOMAS YOUNG CHAPTER, Sons of the Revolution.

Sir

You will receive inclosed the declaration of JOSEPH McJUNKIN asking for a pension for the heirs of his mother--the widow of the late DANIEL McJUNKIN, who was a Soldier of the Revolution.

I am requested to state to you my opinion as to the credibility of the witnesses JOSEPH McJUNKIN, Senr, THOMAS YOUNG, and MARGARET BEATY.

These witnesses were in their lifetime (they are now all dead) residents of Union District where I reside--The witnesses MAJOR JOSEPH McJUNKIN & MAJOR THOMAS YOUNG were both pensioners of the United States at the time of their death & were men of undoubted credibility--& of the highest order of public virtue. Both were literally covered with honorable scars which they received in the battle fields of the Revolution. MARGARET BEATY was a lady of high character--one of our Revolutionary Matrons--and the mother of one of the best families in the up Country of South Carolina--In all this I speak from my own personal knowledge.

It so happens that I am also well acquainted with JOSEPH McJUNKIN the declarant--who now asks for a pension upon the testimony offered--I lived a near neighbor to him for several years in Greenville District, S.C. At the time I knew him, (& I do not suppose he has changed since) he was a gentleman of great respectability & entitled to confidence in every way--as an honest truthful man & good citizen --and from my youth to the present time I have heard the McJUNKIN family spoken of as among the best Whig soldiers in South Carolina during the Revolution--When I am asked to testify as to the credibility of these War Worn heroes (for they were nothing less) of the Revolution MAJORS YOUNG & McJUNKIN, whose palsied hands I have pressed in my own so often--but who are now numbered with the dead--I hardly know when I have said enough in reference to men whose equals in all that constitutes the true Patriot, it is much to be feared we will not soon see again--

Be please to report this case to myself at your earliest convenience

I have the honor to be your

YOUNG, THOMAS, MAJOR. (Plus BRANDON, WM. FARR, McJUNKIN Info)

DRAPER MSS, SUMTER MSS. 15 VV Pp 173-4.

COL. WM. FARR- Services, Dept. of Interior, Pension Division,
Washington, D. C. Apr. 15, 1880

Sir:---In reply to yours of the 12th inst., I have the honor to state that WM. FARR, while residing in Union District, then known as "96", volunteered as CAPTAIN in the State Militia of South Carolina in 1776 as testified to by MAJOR JOSEPH McJUNKIN of Union District in 1839, in a regiment known as the SPARTAN REGIMENT, commanded by COL. JOHN THOMAS, LT. COL. WM. WOFFORD and MAJOR WM. HENDERSON and continued in that capacity until 1777, in which year the old Spartan Regiment was divided and the 2nd Spartan Regiment was under the command of COL. THOMAS BRANDON. At which period or soon after a MR. BULLOCK held the rank of Major.

Under this arrangement, FARR was a part of the time Captain of Foot and part of time Captain of Horse, and Adjutant and Major until January 1781, when he was appointed Lt. Col. serving until the middle of the year 1782, when the regiment was in service under Genl. PICKENS.

He married ELIZABETH TALIAFERRO FARR, as she signs her name, Oct. 4, 1779 and he died in Union District, March 2nd 1794.

MAJOR McJUNKIN states that he enlisted as a private in 1776 and in 1777 was promoted to a Captaincy and 1780 to be Major in the regiment commanded by COL. BRANDON, in which capacity he served remaining until 1782. The record does not show a vacancy of that rank until January 1781 (or 6) when FARR was appointed Lt. Col.

MAJOR THOMAS YOUNG & CHRISTOPHER BRANDON DEPOSE THAT THEY VOLUNTEERED AS PRIVATES IN 1780 WHEN FARR WAS IN COMMANDAAS LT. COL. AND JOSEPH McJUNKIN WAS MAJOR. BOTH WERE IN THE BATTLE OF COWPENS.

From the statement of the witnesses, it appears that the regiment or at least WM. FARR was in the battles of STONO, HANGING ROCK, BLACK STOCKS on the Tyger River and at COWPENS. He was in the march to RAMSOURS MILLS, N.C. and to the MIDDLE SETTLEMENTS and VALLEY TOWNS ON THE HIGH WASSE, now a part of Tennessee.

Whig Scouts Surprised

A party of eight persons were set on a scout. They stopped at the house of an old man named Leighton. The house was near Fairforest Creek and not far from its mouth. A lane passed through the plantation by his house. Leighton was of doubtful politics, with an inclination to the strongest side. At the time the scouts stopped a party of Tory Tories were lying on the other side of the creek. In a short time they came over and formed on each side of the house, unperceived by the Whigs. Two of their party came near and fired. Two of the Whigs, William Sharp and William Giles, mounted their horses and charged through the Tories and made good their escape. Two others, John Jolly and Charles Crane, ran off on foot through the field. Crane succeeded, but Jolly was shot dead. The remaining four staid in the house, made a gallant defense, killed and wounded a number of their assailants, but after night were compelled to capitulate. They were put in jail at Ninety Six, where two of them, Richard Hughes sr., and his son, John, died. The other two, James Johnson and Allbritton, returned. This affair occurred in the latter part of 1780.

Major Thomas Young:

Perhaps in the habit of attending at Union upon public days within the last twenty years have hardly failed to notice an old gentleman moving [illegible] in the crowd. He was of rather [illegible] build. Broad shoulders and [illegible] arms. Among his gray locks [illegible] deep scars may be traced [illegible] head. If his right arm were [illegible] similar evidences of violent [illegible] would be manifest. This gentleman was familiarly known as [illegible] Tom Young. Whence these [illegible] On the night before the Battle [illegible] it was considered a matter [illegible] to strengthen Washington's position of [illegible] to battle. A call was made [illegible] for volunteers to [illegible] Thomas Young [illegible] a spirit of [illegible] but [illegible] practical [illegible] On that night he joined the cavalry under McCall. He went [illegible] the battle of the [illegible] by, leaving Sevier and accompanied Washington in his very effective evolutions on that occasion. After the surrender of the British infantry a company of fourteen dashed off to take possession of the British baggage wagons ten miles distant. Major Benjamin Jolly and a Frenchman called Dr. Barron headed this party. It happened to pass Col. Tarleton while he was collecting his men after the retreat. Unconscious of this fact, they pressed on in comparative security.

A number of prisoners and pack horses were soon picked up. Jolly, not wishing to be impeded, ordered Thomas Young and some others to take charge of the prisoners and horses and conduct them to headquarters. In the exertion of this trust Mr. Young and party were met by Col. Tarleton and his cavalry.

Young wheeled and fled. Unfortunately he had exchanged horses in time of the battle. He was soon overtaken and, refusing to surrender, his head and arm were literally hacked over. He was finally overpowered and taken back to Tarleton. Though bleeding profusely he was taken along with the flying cavalry in their retreat.

Tarleton Grills Young En Route

"After we had proceeded some distance," says Major Young, "Col. Tarleton sent for me and I rode with him several miles. He questioned me about our force and whether Morgan had not received reinforcements on the night before. I told him," said the Major, "that we had not been reinforced, but that Morgan was in hourly expectation of new recruits. This last," said he, "was false, but I wished to alarm them as much as possible."

There was another prisoner along, taken at the same time with Mr Young, named Deshazes. The two got together and determined to escape if possible during the night, which was now approaching. A British dragoon agreed to desert with them. About dark they reached Hamilton's Ford on Broad River. Here a scene of great confusion took place at ot taking the river. In the midst of the [illegible] Young and Deshazes rode into the woods and remained quiet until the British were gone. They then struck across Parolet River and got among friends. Mr Young presently recovered from his wounds and entered the service of his country again. He still lives, one of the very few surviving members of the Revolution.

McJunkin In Peaceful Pursuits

About the close of the Revolutionary War Major McJunkin purchased a tract of land in the vicinity in which he was brought up and applied himself assiduously to business as long as physical energy permitted. He raised a large family. His worthy companion lived to an old age. He united with the Presbyterian Church at Brown's Creek, of which he was for many years a ruling elder.

Some thirty-five years ago the Quaker residents in that section moved off in a body to the Northwest. They sold their place of worship to a citizen who purchased it with a view of moving the building to the plantation for a barn. Before the removal was commenced Majors McJunkin, Otterson, James Dugan, Sam Hobson and others made arrangements and bought the Quaker meeting house for a place of worship. Religious worship was commenced in it by Rev. Daniel Gray, and Cane Creek Church has grown up from that beginning.

Through life he was a peaceful, industrious, enterprising man, a public spirited, upright citizen, a friend to science and a devout Christian.

He died on Sabbath morning, May 31, 1846, near the end of his ninety-first year. He was buried on the day following at his family burying ground, near the road leading from Union to Cook's Bridge, on Tyger River.

Expert Penman

Dies at Okolona

At Age 87

Prof. W. P. (Will) Jones, former teacher of penmanship and commerce in Memphis schools and at Blue Mountain College summer school and who had won national honors for his writing, died at 7:30 p.m. yesterday in Okolona, Miss., where he was staying with his daughter, Mrs. J. M. Meek. He was 87.

Professor Jones was, for 20 years, teacher of penmanship and commerce in old Memphis University School here, he had been principal of Draughon's Business College, had taught at old Key's Institute in Little Rock and old Memphis Business College and finally retired four years ago after teaching penmanship for two years at Marion, Ark.

Beautiful Writing

His beautiful writing and his diligence and activity despite his advancing age, were twice the inspiration for articles in Eldon Roark's Strolling column and he was known all over this section for his fine work. He is said to have held the small-writing championship of the United States having won four contests in one of which he wrote 32,507 words on an ordinary postcard.

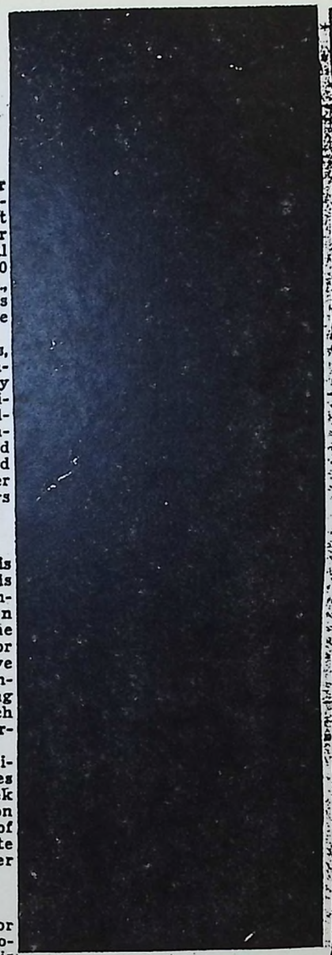
Since his retirement he had divided his time between the homes of his two daughters, Mrs. Meek in Okolona and Mrs. J. T. Denton of Staten Island, N. Y., formerly of Memphis. Mrs. Denton is en route south to attend services for her father.

Born in Phoenix

Born in Phoenix, Miss., Professor Jones began his career as a Methodist minister. He came to Memphis 60 years ago and was for many years a member of First Methodist Church here and, at the time of his death, was a member of Okolona Methodist Church.

He also leaves four grandchildren, Mrs. Hugh Burkett Jr., Memphis, and Dr. Melton Price Meek, David Byron Denton and James Price Denton, all of New York.

Services at 11 a.m. tomorrow at National Funeral Home, Rev. Robert W. Jones officiating. Burial in Memorial Park.



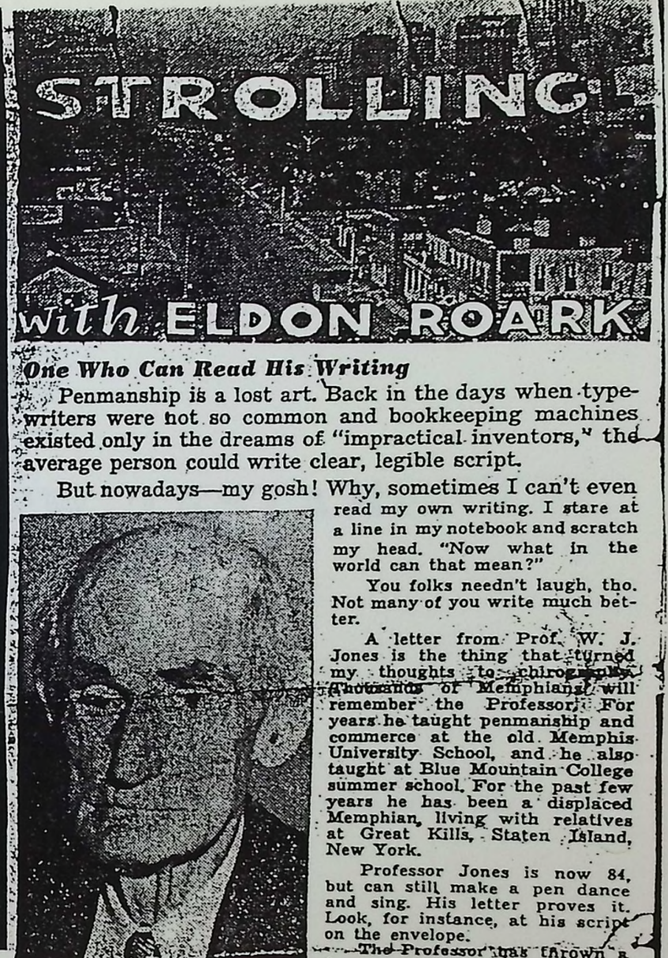
Mrs. W. P. Jones Dies in N. Y.

Mrs. Ettie Young Jones, former Memphian and wife of Prof. W. P. Jones, widely known to many former students of old Memphis University School, Blue Mountain College and Memphis Business College, where for many years he taught penmanship and commerce, died Sunday night in a hospital in New York City. She was 77.

Mrs. Jones was born in Conn, Miss., and came to Memphis when she was 19. Four years ago she and her husband moved to Okolona and since that time have spent varying periods in Okolona, Winona, Miss., and New York. She was a member of Okolona Methodist Church.

She leaves her husband; two daughters, Mrs. John M. Meek, Okolona, and Mrs. J. T. Denton, New York; four sisters, Mrs. T. R. Trim, Hermanville, Miss.; Mrs. Ethel Alsworth, Lorman, Miss.; Mrs. C. N. Bridger, Memphis, and Mrs. Calista Calhoun, Fort Gibson, Miss., and three brothers, Lucius S. Young, Earle, Ark.; James W. Young, Memphis, and A. J. Young, Houston.

Services at 2:30 p.m. tomorrow at National Funeral Home, Rev. Robert W. Jones officiating. Burial in Memorial Park.



One Who Can Read His Writing

Penmanship is a lost art. Back in the days when typewriters were not so common and bookkeeping machines existed only in the dreams of "impractical inventors," the average person could write clear, legible script.

But nowadays—my gosh! Why, sometimes I can't even read my own writing. I stare at a line in my notebook and scratch my head. "Now what in the world can that mean?"

You folks needn't laugh, tho. Not many of you write much better.

A letter from Prof. W. J. Jones is the thing that turned my thoughts to chirography. Thousands of Memphians will remember the Professor. For years he taught penmanship and commerce at the old Memphis University School, and he also taught at Blue Mountain College summer school. For the past few years he has been a displaced Memphian, living with relatives at Great Kills, Staten Island, New York.

Professor Jones is now 84, but can still make a pen dance and sing. His letter proves it. Look, for instance, at his script on the envelope.

The Professor has thrown a few extra flourishes and added some shading, which he eliminates from his ordinary letter scripts, but it gives you an idea what he can still do.

PROF. JONES
Still pushing a graceful pen at 84.

Mr. Eldon Roark

Claims the Championship

For some years before moving to New York he made his living writing invitations and cards. That was after he retired as a teacher.

Prof. Jones claims the small-writing championship of the United States. Once, as a contestant in a contest advertising fountain pens, he wrote 32,507 words on an ordinary postal card!

I don't know what the Professor said on the card. I guess he said, "Having fine time. Wish you were here." Maybe he just kept saying that over and over again.

Professor Jones didn't give me much of a report on himself in his letter. Just wanted to tell me he enjoyed my book, and to ask that The Press-Scimitar be sent to him.

In Memoriam.

Entered into rest, on the 27th day of January, 1900, Mrs. Amelia A. Young, in the 84th year of h[illegible]. "In the confidence of a certain faith." She was a native of Claiborne county, born near old Hebron church, on the 28th day of August, 1816, a daughter of John and Obedience Hail, who were among the early settlers of the Mississippi Territory. Two half sisters survive her, Mrs. Marilla Wylie of California, and Mrs. Calista Carter of Missouri. On the 10th day of February, 1835, she married Mr. E. W. Calhoun, who died on the 20th day of February, 1842. Of the six children born to them only two attained their majority, John C., who was mortally wounded in the battle of Frazer's farm in the seven days fight around Richmond, Va., on the 27th day of June, 1862, and Mary H., who is the wife of Mr. A. K. Jones, [illegible] day of January, Mrs. Calhoun and Dr. Thos. Young were married. He was, as was Mr. Calhoun, a native of South Carolina. By this marriage Mrs. Young had six children of whom only two are now living, Mr. William Young of this county and Dr. James Young of Copiah county. Dr. Young died on the 29th day of September, 1870.

Notwithstanding her great age Mrs. Young retained, to a remarkable degree, her faculties of memory, sight and hearing, and took keen interest in current events. She conversed frequently about death, and always to the effect that God's Messenger would be welcome, and find her ready and prepared to go. She only dreaded a lingering illness that would give her dear ones trouble. And God was merciful to her; for when the call came, "come up higher," there was no long tarrying and painful putting off the trammels of morfality. On Friday she was unusually well and cheerful, but early Saturday morning she had a stroke of apoplexy, causing complete paralysis, deadening the whole organism, and eventuating in speedy dissolution.

For upwards of sixty years she held membership in Pisgah M. E. church, and was conspicuous for the zeal she manifested in everything that pertained to its growth and support. Many relatives and friends paid the last tribute of love and respect by attending Mrs. Young's burial at Pisgah last Sunday.

"May she rest in peace."

We tender to the bereaved ones sincerest sympathy. May they by godly and virtuous living emulate her and finally come to those unspeakable joys which God has prepared for those who love Him.

A FRIEND.

YOUNG, THOMAS, M.D.
